

FACULTY TIPS & RESOURCES:

Academic Integrity with Remote Learning

The Office of Student Conduct understands individuals' decision-making may be negatively impacted by the local and global circumstances surrounding a shift to remote learning. Our goal is to support a respectful community that works together and holds each other accountable to maintain UNC's academic integrity. This document intends to provide a starting point of some helpful tips, resources, and best practices for faculty navigating remote learning.

Create and provide specific instructions regarding remote learning and academic integrity upfront.

PREPARE

1

- Update Sakai with an academic integrity page
- Educate students about academic integrity and its purpose with assignments or discussions
- Be clear and explicit about your expectations in the course and on assignments and exams
- Encourage students to ask questions and clarify instructions

2

MINIMIZE

- Consider a time limit on exams or assignments
- Randomize the order of questions to reduce unauthorized collaboration
- Make exams open note and open book
- Use a pool of question without reusing from previous exams

Create an environment that encourages academic integrity while learning remotely.

Addressing concerns of academic dishonesty when instructing remotely.

CONCERNS

3

- Familiarize yourself and consider ways you can proactively address issues relevant to remote instruction and academic integrity
- Communicate with students about previously reported conduct that have been the subject of Honor System cases
- Contact the Office of Student Conduct with questions

4

REPORT

- Gather all relevant materials for the Honor System referral
- Visit studentconduct.unc.edu for information and to report the alleged violation
- Know your rights, responsibilities, and role as a reporting party
- Familiarize yourself with students' hearing options

Reporting an alleged violation and participating in the Honor System process.
